Abstract
This essay argues for the need of a specific formulation of anti-Latino racism in order to represent this massive phenomenon, as well as to understand the specific form of white or Anglo reaction that is currently on the rise. The racist imaginary has variegated targets of attack with varied and specific representations of Latinos (and, within this group, of Mexicans and Puerto Ricans), as well as Arabs and Muslims, Asians, Africans, Jews, and others (and each of these groups needs further division and specification). Also relevant are the specific histories of the U.S. international relations, and the associated historical memories they invoke. Together these specificities make a difference in the development and formation of reactive policies and informal violence. Although from one perspective all of these nonmajority groups might be thought to share some characteristics that make them subject to racism and ethnic chauvinism, given their non-European status, still, a broad brush concept of racism or xenophobia has let to inadequate analyses as well as ineffective remedial policies.

Anti-Hispanic and anti-Latino racism[]. See also: Homophobia in the Latino community. Gay Hispanic and Latino men report experiencing racism both within and outside the gay community. Gay men with dark skin color and indigenous features reported the greatest level of discrimination, including from the white gay community.[25] Gay bars, for example, were spaces where Latinos and other people of color would face discrimination. The kind of cultural racism directed against Latinos is not in my view inherently different from that directed against the Chinese. WRIGHT being "hardworking, thus creating more value, which helps to clarify why exploitation is the very basis of capital and not specific to Latinos (though they are no doubt very vulnerable to it), on the other hand." It's not anti-Irish racism, it's anti Latino racism of course, but it hurts the Irish by proxy, because in torpedoing every attempt at reform the forces that hurt Latinos hurt us. It's amazing how few people will point this out. You might think that such a self-evident truth would have encouraged the creation of a cross community organization, a rainbow coalition of fellow travelers.
